MONOLITHI OLIVE PRESS, Strongili, Corfu

£350,000
(€400,000)

Description

This stunning building was once an olive press, then a restaurant. With loads of potential to become a fabulous home, this is a very interesting project. Dating back to the 1800s, Monolithi used to work as a traditional olive press. In recent years it has been operating as a successful restaurant and is now waiting for its new owner to bring it back to life. The building is made of stone, so it is cool in summer and warm in winter. The views are wonderful, looking down to the sea and the villages dotted across the mountain. The original olive press is still inside the building, adding to the character and offering wonderful design possibilities. Outside there are spacious covered terraces, perfect for outside dining. With some imagination and design flair it could be converted into a luxurious villa for either renting purpose or for own personal use.
